From Principal's Desk

Summer vacation is around the corner. While children often have an entire season, most parents have to keep working. However, there are ways that parents with a full-time job can keep their children learning throughout the summer vacation.

Summer camps organized by different organizations are great opportunities for children to forge new friendships, gain practical knowledge and keep up with many new skills.

Libraries have long been a huge influence on children's reading skills. By taking your child to the library and giving him or her the accountability of a library card, you are keeping up their reading skills and allowing them to demonstrate responsibility. Many libraries also have summer reading programs for your children.

You can go a step farther and create a family-wide book club. Take turns as each family member picks a child-friendly book. Every member must read the book and discuss the characters and storyline.

If the whole family is going on vacation, ask your child to help out by planning a day trip somewhere. Depending on your child's age, they can plan multiple stops, create a map, etc. This will sharpen your child's critical thinking skills and teach him or her life lessons about preparation, money, and more.

Take advantage of your work-free evenings and weekends by taking your child to educational locations like the museum, a play, or the zoo.

I congratulate the Editorial Team for preparing this wonderful biennial Newsletter for the entire school community and parents. God Bless All.

"Oh Mother Earth, You are holding the oceans and the mountains, you are the wife of Vishnu, today as I begin my day, please forgive me for putting my feet on you." This is a prayer from the Bhakti tradition.

Earth is a sacred goddess. Earth and its powerful mountains are able to regenerate when they are held as sacred and allowed to flow freely. Her gifts cannot be regarded as simply commodities or resources to be exploited by the human world.

Unlike the current Indian society in Ancient Times we were very connected with nature. We can identify this in prayers of all major religion. The Gurukul system also encouraged learning through personal experience. Our modern education system attempts to do justice, however I feel we need to do more. We celebrated Earth Day earlier this month.

Do we really respect Mother Earth? Just as we require oxygen to breathe, plants require carbon dioxide. Life cannot survive without oxygen. A vast number of conditions need to be fulfilled to sustain life. Do we regularly cultivate a sense of gratitude towards the planet itself. Our planet in turn nourishes us and provide us with the optimal conditions we need for sustaining life. What this signals is the close connection of interdependence between us and our planet. The world we live in cannot be isolated but it is a living sharing organism.

One must deny or reject the false illusion claiming false proprietorship all over the world. We must create a new network of understanding the divine, inter connectivity of all that exists. We must invert the ecological pyramid and in humility place the sanctity of the earth, oceans, mountains animals trees and grass and submit ourselves to the lowest place where we as humans are meant to serve others.

Love and caring are basis of one relationship. It is not only with human beings but also with nature. So let us spread love, compassion and peace.

Mrs Annie Kurien
